Typefaces

The identity uses Avant Garde as it's preferred headline typeface. Titles, signs, straplines or other important and short pieces of text should use the appropriate weight.

Arial is used as the body face and should only be used in headers when Avant Garde is unavailable. Arial displays well on screen, both in headings and on large bodies of text.

The full families of both faces are used. Generally, the more important the text dictates the point size and weight of the text.

Strapline Positioning

Short

When a strapline is used in conjunction with the logo, the hierarchy of the mark must prioritise the logo. Therefore, the strapline must be positioned below the logo as illustrated here. The distance between the bottom of the logo must be equal to 1/3rd the height of the text in the logo. The height of the text in the strapline must also be equal to 1/3rd the height of the text in the logo.

Long

To maintain considered composition between the logo and the strapline, a maximum line length has been set for the strapline. If the strapline is to exceed this line length, the strapline must continue below as shown.
